Interacting objects in any case where there are two objects, and interact with each other, it is defined as force by exerting on the other. For example, you exercise your body down towards sitting on a chair, then you sit on your chair, which places an upstream in your body. That is the law of interaction - the two forces are at work - a force over their body, and a force over the chair. His body down is the action force, and the chair is the reaction force. The Law of Interaction is defined by action and reaction. Interactivity in the motion The forces described by the Third Newton Law are or thrusts or strips resulting from the interactions of an object. There are several interactions at stake in the physics of the movement. There are immediate contact interactions, in which the interactions between objects have direct contact. There are also distance interactions, in which the interaction happens without direct contact. You can see this interaction with magnets or electricity. The Law of Interaction in Nature contains many examples of the Law of Interaction. Think about the birds of the sky and how they fly. As the bird pushes down with its wings in the air, there is an opposite reaction for the direction of the rearing force in the bird. These forces are mutual interactions. This force of action and reaction in pairs gives the birds the ability to fly. On the ground, we see a tiger in nature. When the tiger runs forward, its legs exert a movement force towards you back on the ground. When this happens, the floor exerts its own equal and opposite force in the tiger, helping to promote it forward, rapidly. The Law of Interaction in Daily Life You can also the law of interaction in your daily life. When you're at the golf course, golf, Swing The Club on the golf ball. However, there is also an opposite force of the ball that hits the club. When the action and reaction occurs, the ball flies forward in the direction that was beaten. A bicycle trip is also an example of the law of interaction. The feet push the pedals, which exerts a force on the chain so that the wheels roll. As tires rolled, interact with the pavement, which exerts its own equal and opposite force on the bicycle tires. This is the law of movement, moving the bike forward. Newton laws The third law of movement defined by Newton follows the first and second law of how movement occurs. The first Newton Movement Law is also known as the Law of Inertia, and the second Law of Movement of Him is the law of impulse. The first law postulates that an object that is in a resting or movement will remain so, unless it is an external force. Imagine an automobile that starts speeding quickly at a high speed speed. When acceleration begins, your body is pressed back into the automotive. The second law, also called the law of impulse, focuses on how the movement of an object depends on the force that act on the object. More reference. .Com Gradocom
